You're always hearing about them -- the "leaders of the world of tomorrow," the young adults who will lead us into the future.

Well, here are two: Tim Truer and Verner Wilson. Truer is a West High grad who is now attending Harvard University. Wilson is from Dillingham and is currently studying at Brown University.

Both are members of Alaska Youth for Environmental Action, a part of the National Wildlife Federation.

They learned about global warming, saw what it was doing to Alaska and how things were getting out of control, and they wanted to do something about it. As part of their action, they were chosen to participate in Al Gore's Climate Project.

Here are portions of PW's recent interview with Truer and Wilson, which has been edited for clarity and space.

Q. What exactly is the AYEА?

PERFECT READ

'Night,' Elie Wiesel

Few books have ever been able to convey the atrocities of the Holocaust like "Night" by Elie Wiesel.

MY PLAYLIST

This one goes out to the one I <3

You know you have playlists dedicated to a special someone. "He's got a pair of emeralds, and two rows of pearls. His heart is made of pure gold, he sets me free in every way and I can't thank him enough." This playlist is dedicated to all those who want to shine the spotlight on someone.

VENT

Is being a vegetarian a crime?

When people find out that I choose not to eat meat, they either say, "Oh that's interesting" or they exclaim passionately, "WHAT? I love meat!"
